PARENTING AND TEEN DRUG USE

THE MOST RECENT FINDINGS FROM RESEARCH, PREVENTION, AND TREATMENT

Edited by Lawrence M. Scheier and William B. Hansen

Teen drug use is a critical and timely health issue that deeply affects adolescent development in a number of important areas, including social, cognitive, and affective functioning, as well as long-term health and wellbeing. Trends indicate that drug use is starting at an earlier age, the potency of several drugs is much stronger than in the past, and more new drugs are illegally being manufactured to provide faster, heightened effects. In addition, illegal use of prescription drugs and drug diversion or the sharing of prescription medication is also on the rise amongst teens.

Parenting and Teen Drug Use provides comprehensive coverage of the most current research on youth drug use and prevention, carefully and meticulously presenting empirical evidence and theoretical arguments that underlie the mechanisms linking parental socialization and adolescent drug use. Written by leading experts, chapters examine the causes and consequences of drug use, the myriad ways to prevent it, and the latest findings from the prevention research community regarding what works, with a specific emphasis on parenting techniques that have shown the most promise for reducing or preventing drug use in teens. Parenting and Teen Drug Use will provide valuable insight to a wide audience of clinicians, treatment providers, school counselors, prevention experts, social workers, physicians, substance abuse counselors, students, and those who work with youth on a day-to-day basis to influence positive youth adaptation.

Thank you for your consideration. I believe that Parenting and Teen Drug Use will greatly enhance our existing collection for the following reasons:

- Provides an overview of parental influences of intergenerational transmission of drug use, including genetics, behavioral modeling, and socialization
- Highlights subtle reciprocal influences between parent and child and how they contribute to negative developmental outcomes including drug use
- Discusses hallmark features of youth development including identity formation, psychological autonomy, parent-child communication, parental and peer support mechanisms and ways these can influence both anti- and pro-social behavior
- Examines the latest in family-based prevention programs, paying particular attention to what makes certain programs “evidence-based” and how they incorporate the latest in drug research and family-based theories of behavior change
- Reviews therapeutic goals of treatment, assessment strategies for youth entering treatment, the process of empowering youth, and the salient goals of treatment for high-risk youth
- Reinforces the important role of parents and home environment as they influence positive youth adaptation
